God both maintains his righteousness in judging sin and is able to declare the sinner righteous in Christ because of the cross where Jesus died in our place (Rom. 3:23-26). A believer in the Lord Jesus Christ is declared righteous not because they are righteous (they are in fact, ungodly) but because they are granted the same verdict as Christ had.

The Christian, therefore, rightly falls back upon faith in Christ, which brings him both an imputed righteousness, and also, in part, at least, a real righteousness. A deep and genuine faith in Christ is allowed to atone for the many unavoidable breaches of the Law, and that faith by degrees operates a real and vital change in the character and life of the man.

He was holy, harmless, and undefiled. Christ's righteousness is imputed to me in the same way that my sin was imputed to Him. My sin was imputed to Christ, not only in its bitter effects, but He took the guilt of my sin on Himself. His righteousness must be imputed to me if I am to stand in safety before You on the day of judgment.
