Gospel of Matthew :: Catholic News Agency

The fact that the Fathers and all ecclesiastical writers, and even the Church itself from the very beginning, have used as canonical the Greek text of the Gospel known as St. Matthew's, not even excepting those who have expressly handed down that the Apostle Matthew wrote in his native tongue, proves for certain that this very Greek Gospel is identical in substance with the Gospel written by the same Apostle in his native language.

Matthew, Gospel of Saint | Catholic Answers

Matthew's Gospel contains many peculiar expressions which help to give decided colour to his style. Thus, he employs thirty-four times the expression basileia ton ouranon ; this is never found in Mark and Luke, who, in parallel passages, replace it by basileia tou theou , which also occurs four times in
